

Filip Chytry

Threat Intelligence and Security Expert, Global Sales, Avast

Filip Chytry joined Avast in 2010 as a Malware Analyst. Today, Filip mostly drives Avast's collaboration with global mobile carriers and is in charge of partnership proposals. His areas of expertise are the security of the Internet of Things and smartphones, as well as technical sales. Filip foresees problems and solutions in security, negotiates technical implementations with Avast's partners and clients, consults other companies' networks, and conducts security research.

One of Filip's biggest passions is devising and executing experiments to educate people on security risks. In the past, he has shown people what happens when they lose their phone when an anti-theft app is not installed, that data can be retrieved from some phones after a factory reset, or how dangerous using public Wi-Fi without a VPN solution can be.

Through his work with the Avast Foundation, Filip works with NGOs, helping them setting up their IT security. Filip has spoken at events like Virus Bulletin, CARO, ITC and Freedom Forum 2000.

Filip attended the School of Applied Cybernetics in Hradec Kralove and later the Technical College in Prague.
