THREE REASONS TO GIVE

SHARING SUCCESS

THANK YOU

Tina Robinson

The Reason I became a teacher is that I wanted to make a positive impact. I want to inspire children to become more than they ever dreamed. I know I can achieve this by being kind, caring, empathic, passionate and funny. These are great qualities that a teacher should possess. I am going to continue this journey so I can have a impact positive on as many students as I can. This year I'm especially thankful for my family and my friendships I have gained through Yes Charter and The IDEA family. I have been welcomed to their school and made me feel apart of their Team. I understand all families can have there hiccups.

This year I'm especially thankful for my family and my friendships I have gained through Yes Charter and The IDEA family. I have been welcomed to their school and made me feel apart of their Team. I understand all families can have there hiccups, but the ultimate goal has been getting our kids to school. Making them understand how important their education is and how important there presence is.

Many of my students I have encountered this year don't understand the value of education, because they have never seen the benefits education can offer them. I talk to them about their futures and their goals, hoping I help them find value. As their teacher, it's important I understand the community that the students are a part of. Teaching can be challenging at times, but as long as I continue to really care about my students and really help them, both with the materials in your class and their struggles outside of class, it can also be very rewarding.

I always thought about Teaching goals and accomplishments would be measured by students' instructional gains. But what the students I have encountered made me realize is that students personal gains are just as important. It's important for Teachers to get to know their students on a personal level and encourage more casual conversation than I have. I'm going to continue to work on ways to celebrate their uniqueness student within the classroom. To continue tapping in on their uniqueness to motivate their learning. I'm grateful to the great leaders who inspire me growing up, that's also what made me passionate by becoming a teacher.

1

Giving increases your personal outlook – Sharing your blessings with others increases your sense of self-worth and creates a positive impact on your life. Not that the sole reason of giving to others should be self-focused, but it is nice that it feels good to share.

2

Giving helps others – When we give to others, we can help them do something that might seem easy and routine to us but would be difficult for them. Sharing your blessings with others might mean giving money to an organization that helps orphans receive good housing and education. It might mean helping a homeless person get a meal. It could even be a bit closer to home, such as helping a friend or family member who's going through a hard time. Even the smallest generosity can have a large impact on others.

3

Giving begets more giving – When people see others being generous and sharing their blessings, they're more inclined to do the same. The person to whom one shares their blessings with are likely to pay it forward to others when they're in a position to do so. A world where everyone is more generous and charitable to one another is a better world, so why not start the chain reaction by sharing your blessings with someone in need today?

SHARING SUCCESS:

Share a success you've had with your classroom or students so that others can learn from your experience.
