

APPLYING FOR A U.S. VISA

For entrance into the United States, visitors will need to secure a U.S. visa. AMOpportunities can assist with this by providing a B-1 visa invitation letter for their clinical rotation, provided the visitor is eligible.

Through AMOpportunities, medical students are eligible for their elective rotations with school authorization. While medical students can participate in hands-on rotations and observerships, medical graduates are only eligible for observerships except for those graduates who have passed the USMLE Step 1. This group is also eligible for hands-on rotations.

Scheduled *Visa Interview

*Visa interviews are sometimes difficult to schedule. People plan for their travels in advance so appointments may be limited. Without this interview, you cannot obtain a visa. Without a visa you will not be permitted entrance into the U.S.

For entrance into the United States, visitors will need to secure a U.S. visa by applying and scheduling a visa interview. This should be scheduled well in advance of the rotation start date as they may be difficult to secure. Visa denial and reapplication are possibilities. To increase your chances of obtaining a visa it is important that you are well-prepared. This means providing appropriate documentation and presenting yourself in both a respectful and professional manner.

Tips on Behavior and Professionalism

On the day of your interview you should plan to arrive at least 15 minutes prior to the scheduled time of your interview. Arriving late may result in cancellation of the interview. You should be dressed in business casual attire that is clean and pressed, similar to the dress code requirement of your rotation. Good personal hygiene should also be practiced.

Visa Denial

Visa acceptance is not guaranteed, even with a B-1 invitation letter from AMO. Visas are denied for several reasons, including an incomplete visa application, incomplete documentation, insufficient funds to cover trip, prior convictions, and evidence of accidental or purposeful fraud to obtain a visa. Denial for incomplete documentation can be fixed by submitting missing and/or additional documents.

AMOpportunities recommends contacting an immigration attorney with any specific visa questions prior to applying if you are concerned about the possibility of being denied a visa.
