

Blooming @ Confluence

Design Statement:

When creating a landmark, we propose to go back to the very beginning for inspiration.

The design is to 'borrow' something from nature then treat it with various actions. Each action is originated either from program demand or as an actions to the site condition, or trying to make a connections with local history.

For the overall planning, similar strategy is employed. By utilizing some specific landscape elements, site planning aims to recall the local history but also address the urban ecology.