

To bring light is to discover...

Seven spires representing the continents of our home planet. Individually unique and simultaneously united as they converge together to be integrated into an earthly globe that sits at the apex of my streamlined structure. Light is designed to travel from foundation to the summit, docking on different areas along the illuminating sphere. This light will transform. The path of the lights and destinations will also change. The flow and integration of these paths are inspired by the intricate designs of electronic motherboards.

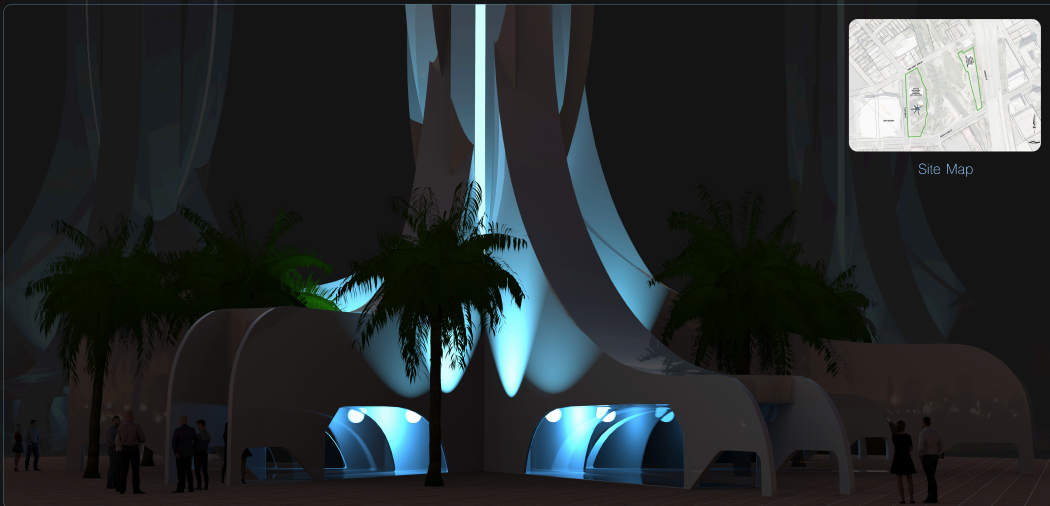

Technology has made our world smaller, giving humans the ability to work, communicate, and connect with anyone around the world like never before. These connections will carry us into the 21st century, helping us to understand we are one global network, we are all in this together, and that we all have the same innate needs, desires, hopes, and dreams. This light of connectivity will push our abilities to the next frontier, engaging us, allowing us to proceed without fears, without restraint, and without limits.

I have incorporated light, its energy, the way it moves, the way it feels, how it flows, and its ability to metamorphosis in this design. We are blind in the dark. Primitive. We build walls. Defenses. The color of light shows who we are, what we are capable of, and where the future will take us. We are creative, complex, eternal. If we embrace one another, and we take the time to let the spotlight shine on all of us, we can do great things. We can build the skyscrapers of tomorrow, together, illuminating rough seas and redirecting the course of our global neighbors to safe harbors, through the power and

We are all human. Full of error, mistakes, and our own eccentricities. We are also capable of the fantastic, and I have a vision of a building that expresses this. I am a professional artist. Not only has it been my goal to design a solid, powerful, eco-friendly structure, giving my design meaning and purpose, but something that is timeless and can stand as a testament to the great things we can accomplish when working together, for generations to come.

Site Map