

LANDPARK is San Jose's newest campus, a place of culture envisioned as a welcoming community space. It aims to be a global destination for sustainable design and a monument to the technological progress forged by the visionaries of Silicon Valley while celebrating the city's agricultural roots. Just as a community is not defined by a singular entity, this highly specific collection of objects unifies the park while respecting the site's natural features, each entity's purpose and form derived from the five elements of nature.