

PROJECT SUMMARY

Silicon Valley is not the story of one, but of many: innovation through collective effort. We propose to apply this ethos to an urban Landscape, creating a monument to communal spirit and sharing of resources. Imagine extending the landscape of Guadalupe River Park vertically, so that people all over the city can orient themselves to public open space. Supported by a timber frame that sequesters carbon, this vertical community space bridges the natural and social realms, planting an eco-social seed that will continually sprout community growth, webbing the region together in a heterogenous relationship between nature and technology.
