

“Americanitis” is a monumental sculpture depicting a postwar suburban house that has been warped and expanded. At night, bright lights inside the sculpture turn on and create a striking and picturesque silhouette. In addition to working as a sculpture, it serves as a leisurely spot for people to find shelter from the sun and enjoy the weekend. Being life-sized, people will be able to luxuriate and spread out within the house itself, while still having a direct sense of being inside the park.
