

Air Space, San Jose, CA

The outline of a large volume is thinly drawn into the silhouette of San Jose.

The scale of the structure alters the perception of human scale and human mind.

The abstraction of the volume creates an abstraction of consciousness, a shared experience by those who approach and step inside the structure, creating a sense of togetherness. This place is not just a public square. It is a public cubic, which forms a community among those, facing the alienation from their subjective perception of one self. Togetherness on a greater scale.

The outline illuminates at night.
