Perfect SAT Scorer

I have known Shaan Patel since he joined National Honor Society in his sophomore year (I was the NHS advisor until this year), and he is also a student this year in my English Language and Composition AP class. Nothing could give me more pleasure than writing a recommendation for this extraordinary young man. I cannot think of a student who is more deserving of a scholarship than Shaan.

I have been teaching for almost 13 years, both at the University of Nevada Las Vegas and at the secondary level in high school, and I can honestly say that I have never come across a student with Shaan’s broad-based abilities. It is usual to find a student with particular talents in math or English, but it is quite unusual to find one who is equally at home with both the hard sciences and the world of liberal arts. He is also a person of strong ethics, and I have never known him to thoughtlessly violate his own standards of behavior, which are exceedingly high. The single time that he thought he might be doing something that could be considered wrong, he came to me and talked it over until he felt he had arrived at the best solution to his dilemma.

I rarely give scores of 100% on essays, but I have already done it twice this year with Shaan. Not only does he have a thorough understanding of English grammar and the construction of an effective argument, but he has the ability to use vivid description and the graceful turn of phrase as well. It is obvious to me that his reading has been both wide and deep since the references that pop up in his essays are so varied. I consider him to be among the top two or three students of my teaching career.

Shaan’s chief intellectual characteristics are honesty and curiosity. He also is quite open and ready to be persuaded from a previously held opinion if he believes the evidence is sufficiently compelling. A good example is the week my AP class was reading George Orwell’s “Politics and the English Language” and Russell Baker’s “American Fat” — both having to do with pompous, excessively Latinized, and jargon-filled writing. At first, Shaan attacked Orwell’s ideas because more elevated language is often useful and desirable when one is looking for precision or aiming one’s remarks at a particular audience. As usual, most of the rest of the class was swept up in Shaan’s rhetorical wake; however, when we were debating the merits of the second essay, Shaan waited until near the end of the discussion and then turned the tables on his classmates by deciding that he had changed his mind about this issue. His argument was so subtle and delicately qualified that it effectively sucked all the air out of the discussion and left the class wondering what had just happened to them.

Shaan will occasionally stay after class to debate a point further with me or bring up something from the previous week he has been mulling over. Ideas are important to him, and he delights in teasing out fine shadings or melding disparate positions in unique ways. I was fascinated a couple weeks ago when he shared some of his ideas about treating patients, using both “Western” science and “Eastern” or alternative methods. He is not a person who believes that the solutions to wellness are simple — because humans themselves are not simple beings. Our discussion ranged over surgical and pharmacological methods as well as social, religious, and philosophical approaches to health. I am convinced that he will not only be a great doctor, but he will surely write about what he does in such a way that medicine will be changed by his practice and ideas. A mind like his will never be content with the status quo. He will continue to pursue knowledge and its useful applications—as well as its philosophical implications—for the rest of his life.

Leadership comes naturally to Shaan. Other students defer to him because of his intellect, but his kindness and perception turns followers into friends. His interests are mainly in the area of helping people, and he usually rises to the top of any group because of the intensity of his interest. When others have given up or lost interest, he will still be working unwilling to quit until the job is done. I personally saw this in Honor Society, when—as busy as he was with other activities—he continued to put in the required number of service hours and more. This year, in my AP English class, he is the same way with assignments and projects. He will drive himself and his group until all the requirements are met to his satisfaction.

I have seen Shaan Patel grow from a rather shy sophomore, who quietly went about the business of earning his hours of service in the National Honor Society, to a confident young man who ran for office and won (he is the current vice president of NHS). I have also observed as he as devoted himself to serving the homeless at Las Vegas soup kitchens, planting trees and shrubs at a new regional park, playing with children at a downtown daycare facility, visiting shut-ins at a nursing home, and volunteering many hours at a local hospital. This year, he has become immersed in his work with a group of young people who are working with the Southern Nevada Water Authority to develop a plan for water conservation in Las Vegas. As he has with his service work with Honor Society, Shaan sticks with his interests, undeterred by the ups and downs of daily life. If he decides that something is worthwhile, he stays with it.

Unlike the stereotypical “brain” who gets a perfect score on the SAT (which he did this year), Shaan is sociable, likable, and respected by his peers and the adults who work with him. I have found him to be a person of remarkable maturity for his years, and I have personally watched him handle difficult personal situations with seriousness and calm.

He was not raised in a “cushioned” middle class suburb; instead, he has lived over the family motel in the urban core of Las Vegas. His perspective has been shaped not only by a strong family and ethnic identity, but by the sometimes raw life he has observed on the streets around him. He has developed an understanding of the world that includes the disadvantaged as well as the affluent. He not only possesses a sharp intellect, but he has developed a compassionate heart and graceful way with people that is utterly sincere. His resume is replete with academic accomplishments, extracurricular activities, and service to his communities; however, it is his thoughtful approach to life and his personal integrity that distinguish him from most of the students of my acquaintance. He is absolutely exceptional.

"Overall, I really enjoyed taking Prep Expert. Thank you very much for providing me with the tools to succeed!"

Laurel Torres ★★★★★

“ Prep Expert lives up to it's promises!!! My daughter raised her score 230 points not only earning her a Bright Futures scholarship in the state of Florida that pays 100% of her college tuition, but boosting her college application stats. She went into this program dreading it's start date - she completed it during the summer. To her surprise and mine as well, she really enjoyed this prep program. Each homework assignment and practice test was easier than the previous assignment and her practice test scores consistently increased. The consistent SAT score increase boosted her self confidence and subsequently led to a 230 point score increase. Kevin was my daughter's instructor. He was personable, funny, relatable, young, and crazy smart. He was able to explain questions from varying angles. He reinforced what was imperative, and shared test taking strategies that were invaluable. During my daughter's first few SAT tests, she was unable to finish math or reading sections. During her final SAT test, she finished with time to spare, and sufficient time to review her answers. I can't say enough about Prep Expert! They gave my daughter not only the knowledge she needed for a great SAT score but also the confidence she needed to believe that she could do it! I paid $800 for a program that literally saved me $48,000 in tuition fees. Thanks Prep Expert!!!!

I took the 6-week SAT course with Daniel, and it was one of the best decision I have made for myself. The tips provided really helped with my test taking skills and I saw immediate improvement. Daniel is an amazing instructor, who makes the difficult problems seem easy. Definitely worth your time and money!

Prep Expert provided me with the skills and the confidence that helped improve my test-taking abilities and final score on the SAT. My instructor was Miguel C. Miguel was a very skilled and helpful instructor. He always answered any question we asked and kept the class interesting during the 3-hour sessions. Jacob H also subbed for Miguel two times during my course. Jacob brought some very helpful insight into the class with his academic talent as well as his college experience. I benefitted a lot from the feedback that I got each week from the homework and practice tests. It was especially useful to see the comments that the essay grader made about all my essays, and over the course of the program I progressed to a near-perfect score in that segment. Overall it was a great experience and I am glad I enrolled! Thank you, Miguel, Jacob, and everybody at Prep Expert!

“Amazing class! My score went from a 1080 to a 1400! I saw huge improvement since I am an intelligent person, I have just always had a hard time test taking. This class helped me immensely!”
