

Intelligent drafting for corporate matters

Clarilis is an advanced precedent automation platform that adopts a unique approach to complex automation.

Our intelligent drafting platform understands legal documents, with a rules-based approach to drafting, layout conventions and many other rules of construction. This makes it far more straightforward and structured to draft a range of contracts and documents from complex suites of precedents, such as share purchase agreements (SPAs) with many ancillaries and parties and complex underlying deal structures, than it would be with other document automation platforms, which are general purpose in their approach

We also recognise that transactions and other legal matters involve multiple documents. As a result, Clarilis focuses on modelling an entire matter, rather than automating one document at a time. This highly structured approach has the power to radically reduce the time it takes to draft entire suites of complex documents - typically by 90% on the first draft and 100% on ancillaries - and enables the drafting of, for example, all the documentation required for a share or asset purchase to be done with ease.

Experience

Clarilis has many years' experience of automating sophisticated suites of precedents within corporate departments for firms such as Travers Smith, Burness Paull, Addleshaw Goddard, Burges Salmon, RPC, TLT, Gateley plc and Herbert Smith Freehills.

Our matter-based intelligent drafting platform helps law firms improve the speed, accuracy, consistency and cost-effectiveness of document drafting, helping you to improve margins and gain a competitive advantage.

Automation of corporate documents including:
